other practical matters, that should be introduced into all schools. In the Normal Department, a disposition has been manifested to after pt far too many studies at a time, to the great detriment, alike of the thoroughness and mental habits of the student. This has been measurably corrected, and will be slill more fully corrected hereafter. The course of study will be revised, and made more adequately to represent the present status of the Normal education, including more professional training, as well as be more fully adapted to the circumstances and wants of Nebraska teachers. The students will be thoroughly drilled to teach whatever is taught in the model school, and whater should be taught in the common schools of the State-and by the most approved methods of modern

We hear dat he fall, wid a builtet in he breast Each of the classes of the three years' course is represented in the school. The senior class, however, is small, consisting of but two members, who are making good proficiency in their studies, and bid fair to graduate respectably, in June next. The junior class is larger, containing some eighteen members. This is a good class and will do credit to themselves and the school. The rest of the students, though aominally in the first year's course, have a range of two years' diversity of attainments. Many of them cannot enter upon ju-
